What is the organization's primary exempt purpose?
 To promote the instruction of the public on subjects useful to the individual and beneficial to the community and to promote the arts and culture by providing public-interest journalism to public audiences through print and interactive media without commercial advertisements

Expenses
 (Required for section 501 (c)(3) and 501(c)(4) organizations and section 4947(a)(1) trusts, optional for others)

Describe the organization's program service accomplishments for each of its three largest program services, as measured by expenses. In a clear and concise manner, describe the services provided, the number of persons benefited, and other relevant information for each program title

28 The San Francisco Public Press is a nonprofit, noncommercial news organization that reports local public-interest news, doing for print and Web journalism what public broadcasting does for radio and television. We provide the kind of context-rich reporting that has all but disappeared from the Bay Area in the last decade. In addition to original explanatory and investigative reporting focusing on populations overlooked by the commercial press, we collaborate with about 30 public media and public-affairs organizations, coordinating coverage and sharing content. Online since 2009, we launched a quarterly print edition in 2010. Each issue includes an in-depth special project, which is also featured online at sfpublicpress.org. We published in-depth cover stories on these topics in 2013: 1) Earthquake safety. Records from San Francisco agencies show that more than 3,000 properties are possibly earthquake-unsafe and need to be seismically retrofitted. 2) Enforcing the minimum wage. San Francisco officially has the highest minimum wage of any city in the United States, but because of lax enforcement, experts say thousands of people are making below the legal minimum. 3) California's cap-and-trade dilemma. California policies to battle climate change are further along than almost anywhere in the country, but there are many loopholes, ranging from environmental "offset" payments to exemptions for transportation and electric utilities. 4) Workforce development. San Francisco is undergoing a major transformation in its job portfolio, but more and more of the money for training and placement is going into just a small number of fields that require advanced degrees. The Public Press aims to change the nature of the conversation about local accountability journalism in Northern California by producing more data-driven, analytical, systems-based and collaborative projects. Our in-depth reporting focuses on the lives of under-served members of the community, including immigrants, low-income workers and minorities. We write about the concerns of non-elites, who are often neglected in the advertising-supported mainstream press. With funding primarily from grants, individual members and newspaper sales, we are building a nonprofit news model supported primarily by the community. Our news stories are available free online at sfpublicpress.org. We sell the San Francisco Public Press quarterly print edition for $1 per copy through about 50 retail locations around the Bay Area. It is also available for mail order through the website. We distribute free copies of the newspaper to nearly 50 other locations serving low-income populations throughout San Francisco. In 2013, we published 7,000 copies each of three editions of the newspaper. Of 21,000 newspapers printed, about 9,000 were distributed to health clinics and community and senior centers through our free distribution program.
